

NYC Public Transportation

By Jared Chin

Public transportation. Citizens of NYC that don't have cars should use public transportation. Public transportation is inexpensive and can take you very far.

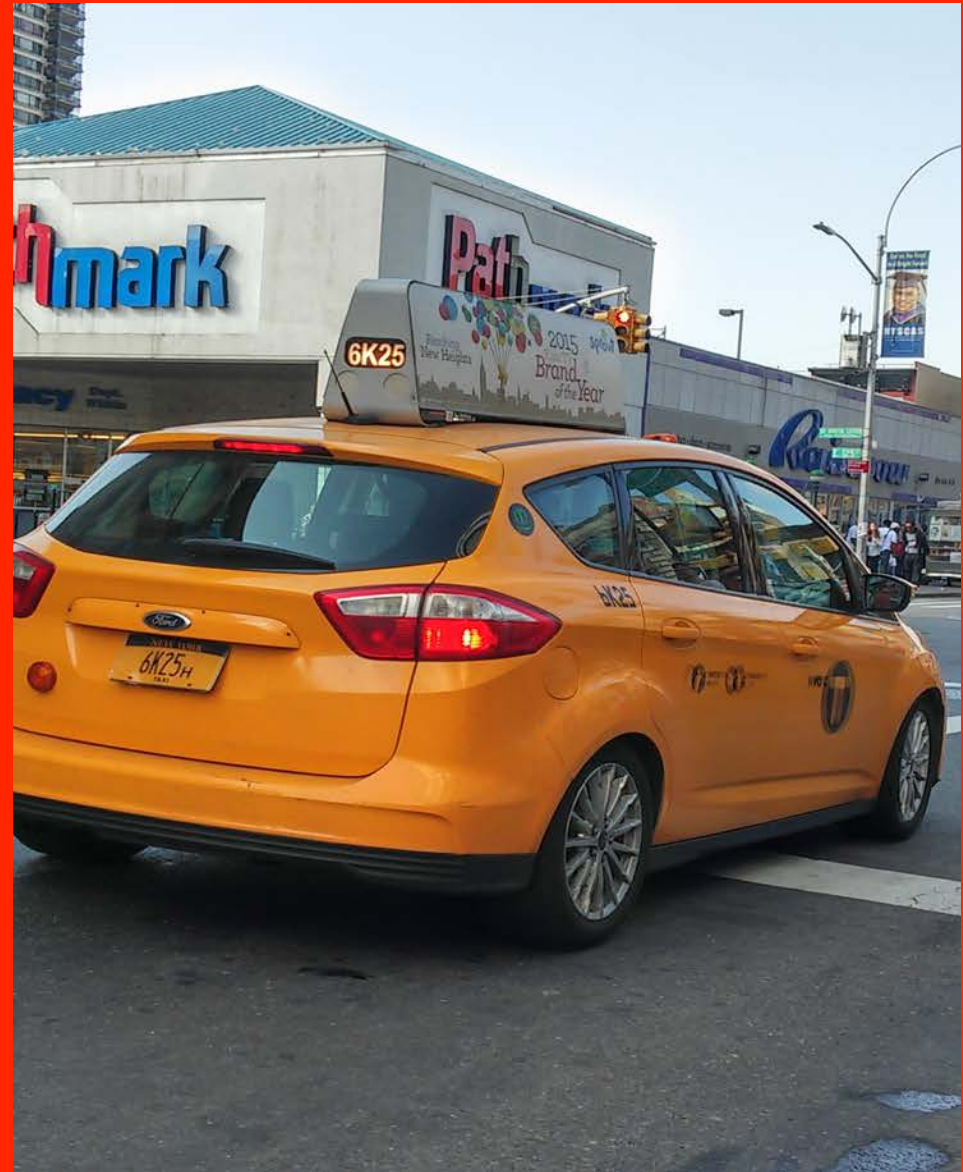

For example, if you are in a hurry to go somewhere and can't deal with the traffic, take a train! The train is an underground type of transportation that can travel at 30 miles per hour without getting stuck in traffic.

The tram to Roosevelt Island

Public transportation is a great way to travel around the city.

One reason why public transportation is perfect for traveling around the city is because many people use it. According to NYC tourist, over 1.5 billion people use transportation every year. This means that people love public transportation and think it's a great way to travel around the city.

Another reason why public transportation is great is because it's better than cars.

In support of this, according to US News public transportation does not pollute the air unlike cars. This shows that public transportation helps the environment unlike cars.

According to Us News, Public transportation is inexpensive for every trip. You can take 100,000 trips on the subway that will cost as much as a car. This shows that public transportation is inexpensive.

Another reason why public transportation is great is because it is for sightseeing.

According to NYC Tourist, it says that if you take the Staten Island ferry, you can see the Statue of Liberty. This shows that you can see many things using public transportation.

Another reason why public transportation is good for sight seeing is by taking the train outside. You can see many things from a high point of view which you don't see every day.

An experience I had was when my family were going to watch a minor league baseball game (Staten Island Yankees). We were on the ferry watching us move along the calm area of water. I saw very interesting sights like different boats, and the Statue of Liberty.

Staten Island Ferry

In conclusion, public transportation in NYC is important. I wonder how the city would be without public transportation? What would you do without public transportation?

