

KET

Flowers
Sandwich
Crêpes

NYC Cultures

MEIJIN SAKABA

By Zack Wilson

15 74

Sake bar
open @ 5pm

In this essay you will see how the different cultures in NYC affect how the city grows. I think that having different cultures in NYC is good because it helps the people in the city get used to living with other races and cultures. That's why I think having different cultures in a city can help.

MAMAK FROM SYDNEY

Street fair

Lemonade stand

food stands

Hungarian
Cafe

Cafés

Indian food

Ethnic Restaurants

San Matteo: Italian

Agora: Turkish

One reason cultures make New York City a better place is that different cultures can shape the city in different ways. According to Culture and ICT make City Life Richer for Billions, it says “Cities around the world are seeing how culture can help tackle potential alienation and identity issues and increase resident engagement and inclusion.” They also make a city exciting and cool to travel to. I agree because having different cultures in a city can help it. There are so many parts of NYC such as China Town etc. and that just shows that different cultures have implanted themselves in the city. That goes to show that cultures can help shape a city.

Secondly people can experience other cultures at events. One time I was at a street fair and when I looked around I saw so many different shops from different cultures and it was really cool because they had all brought their food to share with other people. In an interview with Don Wilson, a travel event coordinator, I asked him in all the places you have been how would they show their culture. He said they would usually have parades or festivals of some sort. Great American Country says all five boroughs illustrate this melting pot of cultures through activities, museums, stores and restaurants, where you can meet people of different countries, sample exotic cuisine and products, listen to international music and watch foreign films. I agree because all those things make us better in some way

Lastly different cultures have different foods. There are different restaurants around the city that are from different cultures that have different foods such as Italian village has pizza, Indian restaurants have curry and Chinese places have rice. Also different foods can mean different things to different cultures because their national food means more to them than other foods.

In conclusion different cultures have different foods and festivals. I think this makes the city better for tourism and the city itself. Also people aren't mean to other races when they live with them in the same city. This shows that different culture can make a city better.