Whenever someone wants something built or renovated construction has to happen. People get annoyed with construction. There is too much construction going on at the same time. For example, in my building they started renovation on four floors at once. They have been doing work on my floor for three months now. They do work for three days and disappear for a week. It makes me crazy.

Construction is everywhere, even in the middle of many streets. It causes lots of traffic because so many cars have to switch lanes. People switching lanes cause lots of traffic because nobody lets anyone in. Then they have to honk. Honking is a sign of commotion. For example, on Second Avenue between 78th and 79th street there is construction in the middle of the street. So in the intersection of 79th and second people start to honk their horns in order to get into a new lane.

Also construction ruins public spaces and parks. It can ruin pretty sights and make them unattractive. For example, in my first picture, I can't imagine anyone would want a mess outside his/her door. Yet some people like construction, particularly renovations, in their home. A person who is having his/her home renovated should be happy but if it starts to take forever then it's not too pleasant. I stated this in my introduction where they started a renovation in multiple hallways at once.

So how do you feel about construction now? I wish construction wasn't so much in the way of people. I believe there is too much unnecessary construction.
